

Bible Quotes and References

Among the works protected by copyright are dozens of translations and paraphrases of the Bible. Only the King James Version is in the Public Domain. Therefore, you should identify every—repeat—every Bible quotation in your manuscript, even the KJV.

If you want to get even with your editor, send in a manuscript with 218 Bible quotations from 14 different translations with none of the quotes identified. I promise you that will set him or her to muttering your name in conjunction with a long list of “I” words—“incompetent, idiot, imbecile,” and John Wesley’s favorite, “invincible ignorance.”

There are several ways to cite your Bible references. If all your quotations are from the New International Version, for example, put this on the masthead/copyright page: “All scripture quotations are from the Holy Bible, New International Version (NIV). Copyright 1973, 1978, 1984 by the International Bible Society. Used by permission of Zondervan Publishing House. All rights reserved.” If every single Bible quote is from the NIV, then this notice up front means that you don’t have to put NIV at the end of each quotation.

If all of your quotes are from the NIV except a few selected ones from the NKJV and the NRSV, your footnote should say that all quotations are from the NIV unless otherwise noted. Your NKJV and NRSV quotes will be cited by the initials and a credit line for them will have to appear somewhere in the publication.

Some publications include credit lines for all the translations used up front in the masthead/copyright/contents section of the document. All quotes are then followed by the proper initials: NEB, RSV, etc.

The Nazarene Publishing House Style Book contains the credit lines for most versions. Here are some of the most frequently used.
